A sewage treatment plant in Okayama, Japan has been using the Volute Dewatering Press since 1999. At that time the Volute Technology had been just approved as the Standard Specification of Japan Sewage Works Agency and we had no installation in sewage treatment plants. It was a bottleneck for those who consider such new technology. No one wanted to be the first to try. This sewage treatment plant made the decision to install the Volute Dewatering Press in that time. Now the Volute is operating without a problem in this 17th year after installation.

This plant is managed by only one female engineer. Here is her comment:

“The Volute is really easy to maintain. I have operated similar type of dewatering equipment, but compared to it, I feel the Volute is overwhelmingly easy to maintain. For example, I can bring the screenings basket by myself and the covers for dewatering drums ease inspection. There is no need of physical work and a female engineer like me is sufficient for this work.”

AMCON originally started as a company to maintain septic tanks and learned the difficulty on sludge treatment. That experience and our wish to solve the difficulty on sludge treatment made us develop the Volute Dewatering Press. This is the reason the Volute Dewatering Press is designed for easy maintenance.

Please feel free to ask us for anything on sludge management!
